

During the residency, 80% of your time should be spent working on your project. The remaining 20% should be spent on cohort activities such as, group events, professional conferences and individual presentations. Attached is a chart describing examples of these activities.

Cohort Activities

The residency experience should be the result of a blend of activities to help you explore a career in digital preservation. To that end, the program is designed to allow for 20% of the week to be dedicated to cohort activities. These activities could be performed on an individual basis or with all or part of the group. They could also include , a meeting with a person of interest or participation in a professional association conference or meeting; below are some examples of these types of activities.

Project	Individual	Group	Professional & Network
Refer to the project outline.	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Identify a webinar on a topic of interest – a recent or current one; invite the cohort to join; facilitate a discussion• Identify a topic of interest; do some research to identify some good resources; share and discuss• Interview someone who is working on something of interest and blog about it	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Organize a demonstration of a tool or a discussion of multiple approaches to some aspect of curation with a speaker within or beyond the cohort• Pick a relevant topic and present your cumulative findings with time for Q&A• Organize a half or all-day workshop or event to explore a topic or tool of interest	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Work with your mentor to identify an opportunity for you to interact with someone related to your project topic and report on the meeting• Identify a topic that is related by out of scope of your project and develop a report• Identify a local or regional professional association you might attend – consider doing a poster• Offer to organize a session or event for a local or regional professional association