

DRAFT

CHARTER FOR THE RIGHTS OF WIDOWS<sup>1</sup>

A Draft Protocol for adaptation to specific country, legal, social, cultural and economic situations.

Discrimination against and abuse of WIDOWS, of all ages, occurs across a wide spectrum of cultures, religions, ethnic groups, regions, irrespective of the economic or education status of the women subject to this oppression

Attitudes to and treatment of widows varies from relatively mild indifference and social exclusion (prevalent in some developed countries of the West) to extreme mental, physical and sexual torture, and even to murder. In Tanzania, a HelpAged study found that in one year as many as 400 elderly women, mostly widows, were murdered or stoned to death accused of being witches. In several South Asian communities the vernacular words used for widows mean witch, sorceress, prostitute, whore. Across ethnic groups widows are systematically and routinely vilified, perceived as bringing ill omens and bad luck, and the real cause of their husbands' deaths.

In the context of legal rights, whether enshrined in International Law, or in the Constitution and Domestic Law, widows are often beyond the reach of modern statutes, and may, for various reasons, be unable to access the modern justice system in their countries. In countries where parallel systems of law co-exist (religious, customary, modern), widows' lives are mainly determined by interpretations, made by leaders of their local communities, of the former two systems. Thus, widows are often barred from inheriting from their dead husband's estate; may be evicted from the family home; lose custody of their children to the male relatives of their deceased spouse. They may be unable to own or dispose of land, and be subject to horrific, degrading and life-threatening traditional practices. This lack of rights leaves the majority of widows in extreme poverty and destitution. Widows and their children are among the poorest of the poor

In spite of the many ratifications to the CEDAW, the consensus of the Beijing Platform for Action, the widespread support for the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence to Women, and the endorsement by governments of the UNSCR 1325, widows continue to be excluded from the progress made in raising the status of millions of the world's women.

Not only are they denied their basic human rights, civil, political, social and economic, but their crucial roles in society, in development, in peace building, as sole supporters of their families have not been recognised. There is a dearth of statistical data or situational analysis of their day-to-day struggles to survive. Governments should explore all other alternative methods of collecting such information, such as participatory poverty and demographic assessment studies involving the widows' groups themselves through Mapping and Profiling projects.

But change is on the way as widows begin to organise themselves to be agents of CHANGE, lobby for law reforms, are represented in decision-making, and begin to be counted and heard.

The Charter for WIDOWS' RIGHTS demands the elimination of all discrimination against widows, both within the family and in community and public life. Non-state actors – such as family members – may not justify the abuse of widows on the grounds of “custom”. As Nafis Sadik once said, famously, “ no custom or religion can ever justify the oppression of women”. We add, nor of WIDOWS.

The plight of widows of war often worsens in the aftermath of conflict, and SCR 1325 has failed to address, in any significant way (with a few unique exceptions) either their immediate or long-term needs. But the aftermath of war, when the numbers of widows and wives of the missing will have increased unprecedentedly, is the opportune moment for widows to organise themselves and ensure that, for example, in the drafting of new constitutions, in law and administrative reforms, widows' issues are mainstreamed and their rights guaranteed.

This Draft draws on all the Human Rights Conventions and Charters, and particularly on the CEDAW and the Beijing Platform. It also accommodates the consensus arrived at in agreeing the MDGs and other Resolutions and Declarations.

The Articles below describe acts and attitudes which are, in most countries, already proscribed under the general principles of international laws ratified by governments. Here they are spelt out specifically.

It is hoped it will be a useful lobbying tool for widows' groups, women's organisations, and inform the relevant Ministries (Women, Justice, Health etc.) of the principle issues.
